

Thought for July 15, 2008

Wanting seeks future fulfillment, thus making the present moment a means to that end instead of an end in itself. Thus you always live in a future that never arrives, because when you get there you want something more.